The Scottish Girl Incident

Misinformation sweeps through social media, quicker than the mainstream media can keep up...

The bloodsucking propagandists drink your attention once more...

Tuesday 26th August 2025. A video goes viral on X - Elon Musk's personal playground of "free speech", where you can search for political actors, scroll through for only five minutes, before your eyes are exposed to pornographic content (as long as the AI has assessed your age correctly) and to go as a side to the OnlyFans "entrepreneurs" you'll be able to review and read a nice slice of politically charged radical rhetoric. From which angle, will depend on which idiot sides video you stayed on for long enough for it to believe that you were interested, as opposed to possibly disgusted and struggling to avert your gaze. When you do decide to avert your gaze, by scrolling further into the infinite reel of doom - coining the literal term 'doomscrolling' - you'll be met with other vile adult content, that may be Palestinians being shot and killed by Hamas members, or other gang members executing their enemies - all in graphic, visceral, low quality resolution captured reality... Oh, when will it end?

The left and right wing propagandists have found a new tool at the whim in this blessed digital age, to peddle bullshit to the masses, get inside their heads and bring them along for the ride. It's amusing really, as most of the bad actors taking such stances are the ones that believe we've entered some sort of Orwellian age, where we're all being told what to believe in by the government and world elites, whilst being totally ignorant to the irony, that it's the social media bloggers, and so called journalists that are starting to control the narrative. The current migrant protests in the UK are a perfect example of this level of control, with members of the public jumping onto bandwagons quicker than a fly descends on a turd in the summertime. Don't get me wrong, there are good reasons to have concerns around the sheer volume of asylum seekers - such as the strain it puts on our national budget and support systems - but there are better ways to evoke change than to be painting roundabouts to resemble the St. George and shouting vitriol outside a hotel. These migrants came here seeking asylum, if you have any beef with anyone, then it needs to be those that made the country look so appealing - benefit scroungers, drug dealers, youtubers, tiktokkers (sic) and I suppose modern day independent women such as Bonnie Blue - the deadbeats that are the new face of the British Dream, enticing these buggers across the third world to then want to arrive and tap into our systems with hopes of a better and easier life. Once you're done with this lot, then head down to Westminster to protest there, as they're setting the policies and propping up the institutions that are allowing them all to stay... Shit, why not, eh? Buy the ticket, take the ride.

Whilst you're at it, demand that institutions like the police are funded further so that we can have some presence back out on the street, so that any person who wishes to commit ill on a child, knows it will be spotted by those in blue within a heartbeat. If there is a heinous act committed on a child in a new and tougher police state, then let's campaign to bring back the gallows and hang any paedophile that commits an act on an innocent child. Notice how I have used the determiner 'any' here? Despite popular belief, these 'invaders' as some would call them, are not the only ones committing harm to our children or women. Chemical castration doesn't discriminate in the same way a radicalised individual does, but it certainly would bring equality into the punishment of such deviants that would conspire to commit such acts. Another worthy cause for campaign - not that this is the only problem we have in the United Kingdom, but if it's the one that gets you fired up and out in the morning to paint a roundabout or bang a flag up on a lamppost, then shit, it's a start...

First and foremost, before all of these actions, you need to understand your numbers, statistics and sources that bolster your information. Some sources, such as the Centre for Migration control, may sound appealing, however, they are a thinktank blog and is run by the Reform UK activist Robert Bates. Information is being gathered up here from the Metropolitan Police as per freedom of information requests (a legitimate way to gather information and data). The data I am afraid at this point then gets all jumbled up, to spin a narrative - such as a statement previously made by the group that foreign nationals have been found responsible and convicted of 40% of sexual crime in London. Robert stated this figure on Radio 4's Today Programme on August 4th, 2025. The Met provided a breakdown of the number of the individuals that had been proceeded against, to bring them before the courts. Now, the key word to focus on here is 'proceeded' as this means they are possibly, still pursuing these individuals to then get them tried, meaning that the figures provided are not made up of those convicted and are instead awaiting a possible conviction, or innocent verdict, meaning these are more magic numbers than approximate ones - but that didn't stop Robert interpreting the numbers in the way that he has, to push on a narrative, which is quite possibly one of Reforms strongest manifesto promises - deport all illegal immigrants. Even that statement there is to be scoffed at, as all migrants in hotels at this time are reported to be asylum seekers, which is a legal pathway to enter the country.

This is all important to note, because it shows that where there is something to be gained by someone, then there's a compelling reason to take a statistic and present it in a way to push that agenda. I don't condemn any politician that does it... shit, politicians are the types of performers that give any street scammer something to aspire to. The US has a convicted rapist sat in their White House simply based on solid expertise in the "art of the deal" - which is why it's so bizarre that so many individuals on this earth will blindly pick a side and follow, not ever pondering the notion that every person trying to get your vote, is doing it to gain power, status and ultimately money and legacy... to them we're just numbers scattered across the nation, that resemble ants perceived by the elites in their private jets as they soar overhead, feeling satisfied for all they have achieved for themselves.

This is where the X problem comes into full effect. Those that aren't necessarily trusting of the governmental appointed officials, can log in via their smart phone and catch up on their favourite patriots and crusaders. The kind that will ask you to invest your money in their mission, so they can take the country back to its glory days. All promising sounding in concept, yet the promises lead to disappointment as they don't ever seem to be kept and nothing is changing. Yet the trust, follows and impressions continue... oh, will we ever learn?

A video pops up in the newsfeed, of two young girls being filmed by a male with a foreign accent. There are all kinds of commotion and there is a menagerie of screams and shouts in Scottish accents from the teenage girls. Shouts of "She's 12 years old", "you're a fucking kid basher", "Get the fuck away from us" etc. before one of the young ladies, pulls a large blade and an axe from her trousers, brandishing them at the recording individual in a threatening fashion, in a show of force that says, 'back off', with the camera man failing to do so and continuing to shout back at them screaming "that's it, show the knife... show the knife".

The video is a whopping fourty four seconds long and with it come no sources, no narrative that tells you exactly what is happening in the video. In most cases, those that would view a video like this may take an objective view and ask a few questions first, before casting a judgement.

- What started the argument?
- Who is recording?
- Why does this young girl have an axe and knife in the first place?

Etc. etc.

The issue of course is that apps like X are a nightmare to get famous on, unless you keep up with the posting, maintain engagement and ensure everyone glued to their phones only sees just a snippet of something, to get the dopamine hit they have come for and ensure they don't lose their attention span. Just like Elvis at Las Vegas - he may have come up with some new material, but no one would care, because they're there to hear the hits. Same applies to followers - if they follow a particular actor for their unabashed slamming and hating of migrants, then the individual running the profile to maintain engagement, should probably give these fuckers what they want and have come for.

The narrative peddled immediately in this incident, is that these young girls are defending themselves against an attempted sexual assault from a migrant. Shocking hard hitting stuff, that fits perfectly in with the current noteworthy issues surrounding migrants, where actual sexual assaults have taken place, such as in Epping Forest against a fourteen year old girl - which is one of the protests I am unashamed to say I've supported and been a backer of, due to the fact it was peaceful, had decent representation of all members of the community and aimed to bring about positive change.

The issue with this video and the rhetoric being pushed is again, that it was backed by no sources as I have already stated. Did that matter? Ho ho! Not at all! Within minutes, the video went viral and got swept along like a tumbleweed gaining weight, size and structure across the internet, with all actors involved spreading the narrative, with a large portion of these being on the right or far-right of the political spectrum. It wasn't long of course, until the update came that the young lady was arrested for brandishing offensive weapons in a public space.

I couldn't help but start to feel something myself. Especially considering my time spent speaking to youths about knives and the current knife crime epidemic that has plagued our nation, resulting in kids becoming so scared and paranoid that they feel it necessary to carry such an instrument, in the off chance they'll get attacked for whatever reason they couldn't quite find the words to articulate and rationalise. I felt empathy immediately for the young girl, because despite not knowing the truth of the matter, to know she feels so threatened she has to carry such weapons is a tragedy of our nation in modern times. Kids should feel safe, protected and heard. This of course, isn't the narrative here as it fits no political agenda that could gain some seats in parliament, or drive protesters to go from being peaceful to violent, so as to try and bring change through such dangerous means.

Below are just some examples of the posts and memes created within minutes and hours of the event, that flooded the newsfeed:

@Mikes_Opinionz

This little girl, defending herself and her sister from a potential sexual assault has been arrested. Scotland has lost its way. The Scottish should reclaim their country before it's too late.

@burkeanorder

If 14 year old Scottish Girls are gripping a knife in one hand and an axe in the other to defend themselves against migrant predators stalking them, your country is in serious trouble

@GoldingBF

Young Scottish girls shout at a migrant pervert, recording them before brandishing an axe and a knife to warn him off!

Is this what our country has come to?

Is this what our girls have to do to protect themselves?

@holli_the_nord

The Scottish government chose the wrong battle and the wrong battlefield by arresting this girl. She is now the de facto Queen of the Scots

Pretty impressive stuff. Powerful rhetoric and imagery. Even the memes can get you sucked in. The AI generated images of a young girl, ready to fight to defend herself and her kin. I was feeling engrossed by the story, as if I were seeing a war time poster, encouraging me to fight in her corner with her, head down to my local migrant hotel and start to shout through the windows for them to get away from our kids. However, the real kicker is, I am a pursuer of truth... and so far, I am not seeing anything tangible here, that gives me any semblance of faith, that I have the full story. I continue to sweep and see nothing but repeats. Individuals calling out that enough is enough and that something needs to be done, whilst more flags get strapped to lampposts and more protests emerge. Whilst this is all proceeding there are many on X praising Elon Musk for taking notice of the situation and placing his own words to it all. He received all kinds of responses of people praising his takeover of the app as the mainstream media at this point were silent on such a breaking and important story - which was totally true. In fact, the only coverage came from articles around police warning people to not trust misinformation, whilst releasing no clear details themselves to quash it and the rest of the news outlets were the same. So, the viral creature grew more arms and legs, continuing to travel around, creating a digital mob of people at a distance, suddenly and magically connecting them all, by way of this low resolution, lacking in content and not even a minute long video.

After 2 days, an article is released by Douglas Walker of the Daily Mail, titled:

"Revealed: The truth about the 'migrant' who a Dundee schoolgirl brandished a knife at... and how wrong rabble rouser Elon Musk and Tommy Robinson were."

Boy... what a headline and lead, eh?

"The ugly video clip from a Dundee housing estate in which a schoolgirl brandished a knife and an axe soon went viral, with rabble rousers such as Elon Musk and Tommy Robinson pitching in to claim the man filming the exchange was a 'migrant'.

Others lauded the girl as a 'Braveheart figure, defending her homeland from a predatory alien, with comparisons quickly cited about the Asian grooming gang scandals of Rotherham and Rochdale.

Now we can reveal the man being threatened is a family man who has been living in the UK for four years - and who was accompanied by his wife on the way to the shops when the incident occurred.

Far from being a fresh off a cross-channel small inflatable, as implied by Robinson and Musk, Fatos Ali Dumana, 21, says he came to Britain legally from Bulgaria and he and his wife have an eight-month-old baby."

The article continues to quote Fatos and how he was approached by the young girls, who started up a nasty verbal attack, calling him a fucking migrant and such, whilst adding that the Police found no evidence supporting that Mr Dumana committed any offence.

Here's the test though... can we trust the source? Well, Douglas Walker, by all accounts from other works studied, is a reputable and accurate, as well as objective journalist, who does this for a living. The only agenda he would have had here was to try and break the cycle of misinformation, which is rather ironic considering that the publication that he works and wrote this for is The Daily Mail - a right-wing leaning paper that has supported the Conservative Party in the UK general elections since 1945. If there is any publication that would have wanted to side with such right-wing actors as Tommy Robinson, this is the one. If there was any source of information here to trust, I'd say it's this one, but then again, I would still hold onto some form of scepticism as you should with any news story. There are always three sides; their side, the other persons and then the truth, and unfortunately as this screed has evidenced, the truth is further away from sight than you perceived. It certainly isn't on social media in fourty second videos with a tag line from a person who you have never met and therefore have no reason to trust.

The true tragedy here, is that there is still a young girl, who felt the need to carry a knife and although there is evidence here that suggests the attack could have been self-generated, based on Mr. Dumana's testimony to police and national papers, these kids may have started something they didn't quite know how to finish, other than brandishing the weapons that the current national state of the country has imbued them to do, due to the paranoia coming out of all corners. They may not have started this at all. So far there has been no evidence as to what sparked this confrontation, leading to swords and axes to be drawn to finish it off - perhaps the girls didn't start this - this reality could also be the truth we seek, in spite of videos starting to circle now of these young girls being mischievous around their local area.

After all, the grooming gang scandal is real and despicable. I wouldn't be surprised if once my daughter comes to a certain age if she would feel the need to carry a weapon. I just hope the police that charged this young girl, took an empathetic route to try to understand her more and the rhyme and reason that got her into the place she finds herself. It certainly wouldn't have been helped with all the liars and scoundrels out there, peddling bullshit to get clicks, hits and monetise their platforms to profit off of misinformation and hate.

No, I don't believe any institution should be trusted, nor politician and I damn well know for a fact that any post on social media can't be trusted either, so perhaps it's time to log off. Focus on our own lives, instead of others and if we do feel tempted to log in, best we go in with an open mind and remember that we know nothing... certainly not the truth. The bad actors on both sides are out there, ready to feed you a story that drives their narrative and radicalises you to their cause.

The right particularly these days looks less and less human, although it certainly is humanoid in appearance. When you focus on the features, you see them distort further and further from resembling Homo Sapiens. Instead, they look like Nosferatu, with dribble hanging off the fangs, as they salivate and wait for just one event such as this to somehow prove or push a juicy agenda point. As media content that can be easily manipulated ripens, showing it's veins of propagandic potential, they're on that pulsating and blood filled fourty second video quicker than a flea to the back end of a dog, sinking their canines deep into the flesh of the story, lashing out a post in bigoted and false narrative spittle, hoping it will earn them another shot at more years for their guy in the White House, or a shot at number 10 for the guy they believe is going to give them their country back...

The left is no better, resembling nothing more than a limp and flaccid guinea worm, that burrows into any type of light-hearted or satirical humour, to infect the host with political correctness, before wiggling away to vote for someone that will cite one aspiration, whilst parading around for another that completely contradicts it - such as men playing in women's sports, whilst promoting safe spaces for women to remain and choosing not to hear the outcries from women within their own party. The issue I believe is that at this point in the polarisation of the human experience, both sides are so desperate for attention and satiation from the public gaze, that they won't wait for any story to fully ripen with enough truth, that they can suck this out too. Thus, we find ourselves in this situation. Doomed to choose which vampiric side we'll become familiar to.

It's sad that members of the public are falling for it - but then again, this is a new age for the new dumb. If only people could muster up enough scepticism and take a closer look at these bad actors and propagandists and realise that they aren't powerful vampiric overlords and resemble less a Nosferatu in their prime, and instead more so the deflated remnants of Pennywise the Clown from It Chapter 2... At least, that would be the case if people stopped falling for the political spectrums top players tricks and started to question them more, tearing away their power of influence over us.

The truth of life is out there, and as Hunter S. Thompson told us it wasn't found in the 9-5... I agree and I'll add onto it for this generation, that it certainly won't be found in your fucking social media feeds either...

Even now as I type this, the news has broken that the two adults who were recording the young girls have now indeed been charged with an offence related to the incident... perhaps, the screams of child basher are true... The truth still remains out there. Keep your eyes and ears wide open, and your opinions in, until they have enough information to support them to become fact.

Stay safe.

Doc.
